Project: Allam Building, University of Hull

“The training facility in the Allam Building is expected to experience heavy impact and abrasion caused by beds, trolleys and medical equipment. As a result, we needed a wall protection package that would offer a high level of protection without detracting from the interior design. Gradus were on hand at every step of the specification to offer guidance and advice. The new range of 34 colours meant that we had plenty of choice and were able to select a design that would complement the building's new modern interior and produce a great finished look.”

A range of Gradus wall protection systems and flooring accessories have been installed at the University of Hull's brand-new Health Campus, helping to improve the building's safety and enhance the facility's modern aesthetic.

The new £28million Health Campus boasts the new five storey Allam Building which features a mock operating theatre, hospital wards and intensive care unit.

Gradus supplied and fitted a range of wall protection systems for the new development including bed head protectors, high impact and standard PVC-u corner guards as well as wall guards fitted at two different heights to offer both direct and indirect protection from beds and trolleys. Corner guards and dual height wall guards were specified to protect the heavy traffic, circulation areas from scuffs and scrapes and to help with the navigation of building users.

The bed head protectors provide maximum protection against damage caused by frequently moved beds. They are robust and designed to help prevent damage to walls and wall mounted equipment from beds that are continually moved up and down as well as in and out.

Gradus also supplied Esplanade 5000^{HD} to the main entrance, helping to reduce tracked in dirt and moisture. In addition, stair edgings from Gradus' market-leading XT range were installed to all staircases to help reduce the risk of slips, trips and falls.
